

It was a volatile expiry series for NIFTY, with the index oscillating sharply from one end of the range to the other. During the initial phase, prices remained largely range-bound, with buyers staunchly defending the 23800-support, while sellers consistently capped upside moves near the 24500 mark. Selling pressure intensified around the middle of the series, dragging the index towards the 23600 zone. However, buyers stepped in aggressively at this level, successfully defending a crucial upward sloping trendline and triggering a swift recovery. The ensuing rally enabled the index to recoup all the losses incurred earlier in the series, eventually concluding the expiry with gains of 1.90% at 24555.

Rollover for the benchmark index came in higher at 77% compared to the three-month average of 74%. This was accompanied by a 9.65% decrease in open interest, indicating short covering in positions as participants refused to carry forward bets into the new series. Bank Nifty took a breather during the series, slightly underperforming with gains of 1.24% for the expiry. However, its rollover stood significantly higher than the three-month average at 86% against 77%, while open interest increased by 2.44%, suggesting a buildup in long positions. On the institutional front, FIIs turned into net buyers, buying equities worth ₹3368 crore in the cash segment for the first time in 13 months, while DIIs continued to provide strong support with net buying of ₹35099 crore, although at a slightly lower pace. The FII Index Long-Short ratio stood at 9%, reflecting continued cautious positioning despite the resilience in the broader market. Meanwhile, India VIX cooled off for the fourth consecutive series, easing further towards 10, indicating continued moderation in volatility and improving market sentiment.

Going ahead, 23,600 is expected to act as immediate support, while 24,500-24600 remains a crucial resistance for the upcoming series. The broader trend continues to remain positive, and as long as the index holds above the support zone, a buy-on-dips approach is likely to remain favorable. A decisive move above 24600-24800 could pave the way for Nifty to retest its 200-day moving average, placed near the 25,000 mark. Conversely, a breach below 23,600 may trigger fresh profit booking, dragging the index back towards the 23,100-23,000 support zone. Traders are advised to closely monitor these levels and position themselves accordingly.
